The Guide to Career Choice

For parents and others who accompany young people

You are the compass for your child

Which career suits me? How can I achieve my career goals? And what exactly is waiting for me out there in the world of work? On the path to a career, young people often face a mountain of questions and challenges.

You, dear parents and guardians, are the most important companions, encouragers and advisors on this journey.

Your role is both responsible and vital:

You support rather than dictating.

You open doors rather than prescribing paths.

Career orientation ('Berufliche Orientierung') is not a one-off event but a lifelong process that began with the words, 'That's what I want to be when I grow up!'. Now begins the most intensive phase of this process.

To help you support your child effectively, we are here to support you:

The 'elternpower|kompass' from 'Netzwerk Zukunft' (Future Network) is your guide, accompanying you – depending on the school year – with useful tips and links right up until your child chooses their career.

'elternpower' at a glance: What really matters!

How you can support your child with their career orientation at any time – regardless of which year they are in.

Show interest

Ask regularly about what your child is experiencing at school, in their free time, at holiday jobs or during work experience placements ('Praktikum'). This helps you find out what they enjoy and what topics matter to them.

Listen and take them seriously

When your child talks about career ideas, no matter how unusual, listen without judging. Show openness and a willingness to explore new things together.

Facilitate experiences

Give your child insights into the working world as often as possible – through work experience placements, volunteering, hobbies or a day at the workplace. Use your own contacts to show your child new career perspectives. Encourage your child to try things out and discover what suits them.

Share your story and reflect on expectations

Talk about your own daily work life and career path – including any detours or changes – and consider what you wish for your child. Show that you are there to support them with your experience while allowing them to find their own way.

Encourage them and stay relaxed

Career orientation takes time. Not everything succeeds on the first try. Obstacles and fresh starts are part of the journey. Praise them when things go well and offer support when things get difficult, but without applying pressure.

Foster independence

Let your child handle things themselves. Taking on responsibility builds self-confidence, reliability and perseverance while providing security for new challenges.

Be present and show you trust them

Make time for conversations – even short ones. Show that you believe in your child and trust in their abilities. A heartfelt 'I'm proud of you!' often has a stronger impact than a large amount of advice.

In short:
Show
'elternpower'!

Making decisions

Start planning the further educational or training path specifically with your child right at the beginning of the school year, ideally using the summer or autumn holidays for this. This brings relief during the upcoming exam period at the end of Year 10 and creates clarity and motivation. Many apprenticeship positions are already allocated by 1 December.

Talk to your child about applications, job interviews and selection tests and support them in this important phase. Information on how your child can prepare for these important milestones is available on the elternpower website.

Rejections are normal and no reason to lose heart. Motivate your child to look for alternatives or to do further work experience placements. Use your network too: perhaps someone knows a company where your child can find a career prospect. Celebrate progress together – every application or interview is a success.

Does your child want to do their A-Level equivalent ('Abitur') or university of applied sciences entrance qualification ('Fachhochschulreife')? Support them in choosing the secondary school or their courses. Talk about what suits them and what paths are open afterwards: an apprenticeship, university studies, a degree apprenticeship, a voluntary year or perhaps a stay abroad first?

Above all, the variety of options gives your child the chance to choose the path that is right for them and to pursue their career goal with motivation.

There is no single correct path to a career, but rather many good possibilities.

Stay interested, open and confident – your trust, your backing and your time are what strengthen your child the most.
